

This is an example of an inadequate position paper:

Terrorism is a very bad thing. I think, as a delegate of France, that we should put all the terrorists in Gitmo. They are ruining our global economy and are in general bad people. They take jobs from people who actually matter to the global economy and kill soldiers. Right now in the world in Sri Lanka and Rwanda, there are horrible and terrible terrorists actions taking place. I think that we should do something to stop these awful people. France does not like terrorists. The Islamic terrorists in France should be destroyed by the United Nations for us because they are hurting our country. Two other countries in this committee also have opinions on terrorists. They think that terrorism is bad as well. Some countries might say that terrorists are really freedom fighters but they are wrong. Terrorism is always bad, and it is the job of the United Nations to fix this horrible crises on the face of our world. The united states has the position that they want to kill all the terrorists because the united states is a power-hungry world-dominating superpower. China also thinks that terrorism is bad. Terrorism exists because people are bad and like extremes too much. In conclusion, terrorism is bad because it causes a lot of death and destruction, and it is the job of the United Nations to fix it.